The question is: Does it have a future? (Wallerstein et. al. 2013, 3) This question echoes an old prediction. The expectation of capitalism's collapse was central to the official ideology of the Soviet Union that itself collapsed. Yet does this fact ensure the prospects of capitalism?

Does Capitalism Have a Future? | Motanomics

Capitalism has never been a planned system, but rather an emergent one. As such, it is governed not by consistent practices, but by evolving practices subject to consistent rules. The essential rule of capitalism is not that markets should be free from regulation or augmentation, but that individuals should be free to compete in fair markets.
